

About the Founder & CEO

Delores A. Wallace has been an advocate for Parents, Students, and Teachers, for more than 25 years. Her contributions and roles span across her start as a Special Education Teacher's Assistant to becoming a Community Outreach Coordinator overseeing and supporting parents and their communities. Expanding her gift with working with parents, teachers, and administration, she has achieved stellar performance with having worked closely with the Mayor Offices, Chambers of Commerce in bridging the gap between Schools & Community.

Achieving the goal of connecting all key stakeholders in supporting community school students, Wallace has built relationships with universities in inspiring teachers with an opportunity to tutor students for their State Assessment Test.

Wallace built a strong parent forum that was well supported and attended by those who she encouraged to become members of the National and State PTA/PTO in connection to those who were already members. She created a formula that worked wherein parents had an outlet for their younger children that they sometimes had to bring to meetings. She tapped into the National Society Advisor and Administration for students to help the younger children with homework and play games during the meetings.

Wallace recipe for great schools is building a strong connection in every area for successful achievements in students!
